28 Years Ago...

The Nov 10, 1980 WHS meeting featured Gladys Smith, a local "botanist, teacher, and ecological consultant". She spoke about "North American Plants for Bay Area Gardens". There was a field trip scheduled for Nov 16th at "Filoli for members to listen and watch as Ted Kipping tells us how he would prune some specimen trees in the Garden". The minutes for the Oct board meeting called it a "working field trip". Does this mean that WHS members were allowed to help prune those trees at Filoli? What fun! The raffle table was provided by Filoli, as well. The plant notes began with a plea for more member participation. This echoed comments made at the board meeting where all agreed that the display was educational and worthwhile. May I add, 28 years later, that I still agree, and that the plant discussion is one of my favorite parts of our WHS meetings (along with the speaker and the raffle...) But seriously, dear members, is there a plant in your garden that you could not do without at this time of year? Please consider bringing a piece in and telling us about it! ~ Nancy Schramm

Scott Ogden and Lauren Springer Ogden, horticulturists/garden designers from Denver/Austin, put plants first to make landscapes worthy of the name "garden." Their new book, Plant-Driven Design: Creating Gardens That Honor Plants (Timber Press, Oct 2008), lays out concepts and practices that empower gardeners to design and designers to plant. Santa Barbara landscape architect Susan Van Atta creates flower gardens and habitat gardens that rely on California native plants—the subject of her new book from Gibbs Smith (Spring 2009). Monterey landscape designer Bernard Trainor takes his inspiration from nature—looking outside the garden for planting and design creativity (Pacific Horticulture, July 2008, p.40). Brian Kemble, director of horticulture of the Ruth Bancroft Garden, will share his experience with a pallet of plants that add dimension to Bay Area gardens.

Location: Civic Arts Education Center in Walnut Creek and Mt. Diablo Nursery & Garden in Lafayette.
